

American History Assignment 12

- Read Chapter 11: the Age of Jackson. Look over the review at the end of the chapter.
- Continue reading Founding Brothers.
- Did you know that the grandson of the 10th president of the United States John Tyler (born in 1790) is still living? It's hard to believe, but watch this video and find out more.
- Read Davy Crocket's opinion of Jackson and the bank in these excerpts from his biography:

I have said before that in those days none of us called General Jackson the government, nor did he seem in as fair a way to become so as I do now; but I knowed so little about it, that if any one had told me he was "the government," I should have believed it, for I had never read even a newspaper in my life, or any thing else, on the subject. [...] I an't glad, for example, that the "government" moved the deposits, and if my military glory should take such a turn as to make me president after the general's time, I'll move them back; yes, I, the "government," will "take the responsibility," and move them back again. If I don't, I wish I may be shot.

- We will begin Unit 4 in our next lesson. Begin reviewing for our test on Unit 3, which we will have sometime after our break.
